This experience has underscored the importance of professionalism, relationship-building, and creative communication—skills that fuel collaboration and innovation across any organization.

Over the years, Wesley has cultivated meaningful connections through conferences, coffee chats, and previous internships. These relationships that have shaped his path and continue to support his ultimate goal of becoming a Team President.

WESLEY'S TIPS

Do your best to create genuine relationships with your peers and people in positions you want to eventually be in. Reaching out with questions is always good, but make sure you are appreciative of the time people take to meet with you. Try to learn about them! Whether that's their values, how they grew up, or what has empowered them, don't just learn about what they do and how that can help you.
